unclean, she is not chargeable with the unclean, she is not chargeable with the great crime, for crime it is. Politics must be purified or we are lost. To govern this great nation wisely and well is not degrading service. To do it, all the wisdom, ability and patriotism of all the wisdom, ability and patriotism of all the wisdom, ability and patriotism of all the people is required. No great moral force should be unemployed. But it is sometimes said that women do not desire the ballot. Some may not, many do into those who are not indifferent. The contiference can not affect the right of those who are not indifferent. The conservative woman who feels that her present duties are as burdensome as she can lear, when she realizes what she can accomplish for her country and for mankind by means of the ballot, will as reversely thank God for the opportunity, and will as zealously discharge her new obligations as will her more radical sisolations as will her more radical sisolation of the day of equality of rights, duties and hopes.

The Secretary of the Treasury, who has been so near to death's door for the past month, is at work again. I do not mean that he is well or at his deek. He is only able to sit up and take a drive occasionally. But he interests himself with affairs at his Department and discusses business questions with such officials as Treasurer Jordan and Assistant Secretary Falrehild. There is no truth in the report that he had signified to the President his intention of retiring from office. On the contrary, it is known office. On the contrary, it is known that he earnestly desires and fully intends to remain at the head of the Treasurer which he has so ably directed for the past year. The apprehension of his friends now is that he will undertake to resume his official duties before he is physically able.
